

CCC Newsletter # 06-15

Welcome to the “new cycle” of the California Car Clubs newsletter! The newsletter will now be published mid-month, and will contain the schedule for 2 and a half months. This should help give you more lead time when planning to attend shows at the beginning of the month. It will also ease my issues with gmail's limit on the number of emails you can send in any given period. I now have a more flexible window to work within. Expect to receive the newsletter between the 13th and 17th of the month from now on. If you have any questions, don't hesitate to ask.

First off is this email I just received and want to pass on. Perhaps some of you can help them out, and have some fun in the process . . .

“Hello,

We are a reputable reality tv company in Los Angeles- who has several shows setup at the major networks. We are currently casting for a series that follows car clubs, garages, and anything in the auto or motorcycle field. We are looking for family, partner, or independently run shops and/or clubs... if you are family owned... HUGE PLUS!

We are only looking for Latino or Hispanic majority companies. We are looking for loud and charismatic personalities- and a great employee or member chemistry that is a lot of fun and would translate well over to television.

If you or anyone you know fits this description, and were made for reality tv... we want to hear from you. Please provide and contact information, bio info, websites (if available), pictures, and videos if you have. Videos are a huge plus- even if it's an intro to the staff via smartphone clip. Pictures are important... and your submission will not be read if there is no company or biographical information in the email.

Please send submissions to realitytvprod247@gmail.com

Thank you,

Kurt

With that out of the way, I hope you're planning on getting your ride out to a few shows! The calendar is looking good, with shows all over the state; there has to be some close enough for you to get to. Don't forget to pitch-in and help support your club when they host a show. I just spent a weekend helping my club host our annual show. I spent that Saturday pretending to be a competent hamburger flipper. We cooked almost 250 hamburgers and hot dogs that day. Once you get into it, it's a lot of fun. Well, except for the grease and smoke in your eyes part.

So now with the burgers out of the way, let's move on to some great trivia!

In 1952 a U.S. automobile company contracted with a European automobile company to help with designing a new model. The resulting car was called the Type 542. When the completed prototype was brought to America, one of the American car company's engineers pretty much single-handedly shot the project down. So, the questions are:

1. What was the name of the American auto manufacturer?
2. What was the name of the European auto manufacturer?
3. And what engineer shot it down?

As always, the answers will be after the show listings . . . and no fair skipping down! So now we move on to the shows!

Welcome to Russo & Steele; California Car Clubs Newest Supporter!

OK, if you didn't skip down, you can read the answers now.

1. In 1952 this 100 year old company was having cash flow issues, so they turned to an outside source to help with development of a new model. The company was Studebaker.
2. Studebaker reached across the pond to a company that had been formed in 1931 as “designers and consultants for land, sea and air vehicles”. That company was Porsche. (Of course you already knew that, I'm sure.) To this day, Porsche still consults; they were instrumental in helping Harley Davidson develop the engine for their V-Rod.
3. When Porsche presented the Type 542 in South Bend, Studebaker's Director of Experimental Engineering was highly critical of everything about the prototype that was European. That engineer was John Z. Delorean; yep, that John Z. Delorean.

One of the interesting features of the car was the engine. It was a 120 degree V-6 that was both water, and air cooled! The cylinder heads were cooled by air, while the cylinders themselves were water jacketed. This proved to be much too complicated system for production, so an all water cooled engine was called for. Even though the entire project was scrapped, the prototype engine still lives, at least as a display. It resides today in the Porsche museum.
